Things That Never Die. The pure, the bright, the beantiful,
That attred our hearts in youth;
The impulse of a worldless prayer.
The dream of love and truth;
The longings after something lost;
The spirit's yearning cry;
The striving after better hopes;
These things shall never die.

The timid hand stretched forth to aid
A brother in his need;
The kindly word in grief's dark hour
That proves the friend indeed;
The plea for mercy, softly breathed,
Waen justice threatons nigh,
The sorrows of a contrito heart;
These things shall never die.

The memory of a clasping hand,
The pressure of a kies.
The hisdly word in grief's dark hour
That make up loves fixes blies;
If with a firm, unchanging faith,
And holy trust on high,
These hands have clasped, these lips have met. These things shall never die.

The ortiol and the bitter word, The chilling want of sympathy,
That wounded as it fell,
The chilling want of sympathy,
We feel, but cannot tell;
The hard repulse that chills the heart
Whose hopes were bounding high;
In an unfading record kept,
These things shall never die.

Let nothing pass, for every hand Must find some work to do;
Lose not a chance to waten dove,
Be firm, and jiet and trae;
So shall a light that cannot fade
Beam on thee from on high;
And angel voices say to theo,
These things shall never die.

The Westfield Explosion.

The New York papers still contain vo-luminous reports of the disaster to the steam ferry-boat Westfield. The follow-ing are additional particulars: Everything on the boat remains as it was left by the explosion; and it is diffi-cult to conceive of a more perfect wreck. About ten feet of the forward portion of the shell of the boiler has, been blown clear forward, and is warded into the bow, having lifted the derive poddily in its passage, Another section of shell blew out sideways, and is flattened against the side of the boat, accommodating itself to her shape by the force of the explosion, as readily as if the explosion, as readily as if composed of oil-olath instead of bibler iron, and the force with which it atruck the timbers was such that the concussion started bers was such that the concussion started off the outside planking. The main portion of the boiler, was forced over to the opposite side from this piece, and exhibits its ends with the jagged holes from which the braces have been torn bodily, while in one place is a huge rent, showing the tremendous force with which the shell had been torn away. The smoke stack lies prone along forward of the boiler, just where it fell. The great deak heams are torn, and twisted, and splintered into all sorts of shapes, while the lighter wood-work of the cabin. while the lighter wood-work of the cabin. pilot-house, &c., is literally splintered into fragments. Here and there, among into tragments. Here and there, among all this rubbish, is seen great clots of blood, and fragments of hair and clothing, horrible mementoes of the late batchery. As ghastly trophies, the policeman in charge exhibits to visitors the perfect skins of two hands, fingers and the state of two hands are stated to the state of two hands are stated to the state of two hands are stated to the stat perfect skies of two hands, fingers and thumbs all complete, like gloves, just as they were wrenched from off the victim by the terrible steam; and which were picked up yesterday among the debris in the hold. "Abatt the boiler the engine is jarred and swieted out of position, and some heavy water tanks forced clear from that years and hurled savaral feet. The some heavy water tanks forced clear from their beds and hurled several feet. The after death and hurled several feet. The after death and after cabins are not much injured; the work of destruction being principally forward. The hull proper of the vessel is not much damaged, and shows evidence of great strength, the timbers being of full size, and braced on the inside with iron bars running diagonally across them; and but for this bracing, the end of the boiler must have gone completely through the bow, in which case the boat would have filled and sufficiently, causing probably a greater loss of life than did occur; and, notwithstanding the terrible weanching she had received. The surface water to see the coat would have filled and sufficiently, makes no water. Inspectors which case the boat would have filled and suilk immediately, causing probably a greater loss of life than did occur; and, notwithstanding the terrible wenching she in the precisive of the Boat, apparently, makes no water. Inspectors Matthews and Boole commence an examination, to day, at their office, 28 Pine street, by order of the Becretary of the Treasury, to endeavor to ascertain the cause of the disaster, Probably not less than 100,000 persona passed in and out at the Morgne during the twenty four hours ending at sunset yesterday. The police were compelled to keep a large body of men organized in the adjacent streets for the purpose of controlling the movement of the populaca. They were formed in line correst Twenty-sixth street at Second aventa, and the crowd of people was fed out in a single stream like grain out of an immense hopper. This stream reached, from a line of police down to the door of the Morgue, a distance of the populacian and in retiring, it avenue and the crowd of people was fed out in a single stream like grain out of an immense hopper. This stream reached from a line of police down to the door of the Morgue, a distance of one-fourth of a mile, and, in retiring, it took the opposite side walk, as no one was allowed to pass on beyond the Morgue, in the direction of the East River. Policemen were also atationed at different points along the line to preserve perfect order and prevent the rank from doubling up. Often the whole line had to be brought to a dead stop while a new body was being taken in and laid out for identification. Then the current would begin to flow along again, like a would begin to flow along again, like a sluggish river. At least three-fourths of the people in the line were women, most very evident that most of them had come out merely to gratify a miserable curiosity. There were also many ladies who were richly dressed, and occasionally they would be leading two or three little children. The officers who had been standing on duty watching this stream almost uninterruptedly ever since it first began to move, were enabled at last to tell pretty nearly every person who had the slightest expectation of identifying any of the dead, and many times they took individuals very severely to task, especially those who had brough to task, especially those who had brought along families of young children, to gaze on the horrible spectacle. Said a tall, erect policeman to a lady dressed in fine silks and holding three little children, "Madam, you can't get them children through down there, so what's the use of wasting your time in this procession?" The woman was shamed, for she knew she was there simply to gratify a morbid curiosity and coloring to the a morbid curiosity, and, coloring to the ears, she fell out of the line, crossed over to the other side of the street, and passed out with the returning proces-sion. Then the policeman would begin to point out persons in the line who had been going round and round all day, falling in at the rear as soon as they made one circuit. Most of these persons were old women, who appeared to become bysterical as soon as they got in sight of the bodies, trembling, bowing, wringing their hands, and moving their lips as if muttering prayers. They were shown no indulgence after they once reached the door of the Morgue. There were two lines of policemen, who passed the line steadily on, and if they delayed after looking at the bodies, they were carried along by main force to the door, carried along by main force to the door, when another line of policemen took them up and passed them across the street, with an injunction not to stop to rest until they had got back to Second avenue, outside the police line.
